

What's Really Going on in China? By Sheldon Ray Jr. CPM, Senior Vice President, Investment Portfolio Manager, Raymond James

Investors are currently on edge about a global economic slowdown, and much of their focus is on China. Is the world's second-largest economy really slowing down and, if so, what should you be considering for your investment portfolios? This timely program provides an overview of China's economy, political landscape, U.S. relations, key markets, top risks, security issues, Hong Kong relations, trade and military expansion. Sheldon Ray's ongoing research and regular contact with senior government officials, economists, diplomats, regulators and journalists generates deep insights to assess China's impact across the full spectrum of global markets, and ultimately, your investments!

Attend This Meeting and Learn...

1. How China's economy may be in better shape than you think
2. What and who are reliable sources for China insights
3. How the interdependence between the U.S. and Chinese economies impacts your investments

Bio, Sheldon Ray

Sheldon Ray Jr. is a certified portfolio manager (CPM) and senior vice president at Raymond James in Washington, DC. He co-manages a global balanced portfolio of equities and fixed income for individuals and institutions. His analysis covers risk management, corporate governance, global macroeconomics, long-term geopolitical outlook, financial fundamentals and China's emergence and impact on investment decisions. His securities career began at Prudential in 1996, then later Morgan Stanley and UBS; he joined Raymond James in 2015. His first five of 11 years in the real estate investment business were in Hong Kong advising corporate executives. Ray regularly speaks on China and global financial markets to Fudan University in Shanghai, University of Chicago Booth School of Business, National Defense University, Nordea Bank, the Foreign Service Institute and CCTV. He holds a B.S. degree in finance from Louisiana State University and a CPM designation from Columbia University.